SPECIFIC COURSE LEARNING OUTCOMES

Students will write an original definition of "What is Music." Student definitions will be posted on the discussion board and available for discussion and comments by all class members.

As a course requirement, students will attend a concert of classical music and write a paper/review of the concert outlining their aesthetic response to the music and describing the overall experience. The responses using appropriate musical vocabulary. Graded by a rubric.

Several unit tests include essay questions in which students outline details of assigned musical listening examples included on their audio recordings.

Students are required to do extensive reading in the course textbook and are tested by means of objective and essay questions over the material assigned. This includes a short quiz over each chapter in the text, and more extensive unit tests. The first chapter in the textbook presents vocabulary and discussions of musical terms.

Students will access the course eCAMPUS page via the internet and complete extensive assigned materials for all assignments and for communication with the instructor, and fellow class members.
The contribution of African-Americans in the development of an identifiable "American-sound" in music and the importance of that music as the basis of jazz, symphonic, and popular idioms will be stressed in assigned listening to musical examples, chapter reading assignments, and additional audio/visual materials posted by the instructor.

After viewing and discussing the film "Amadeus," students write an essay analyzing the central conflict in the movie. For a passing grade, the student must include at least five direct quotes and descriptions of situations that support their decision that the conflict is either: Man versus man, Man versus nature, Man versus self, or any combination of the three.

The course includes additional audio demonstrations of the families of orchestral and jazz instruments including pictures of prominent musical artists.
